ADWOA ABOAGYE

Absolutely the best surrogacy agency I have ever encountered. Prior to working with Afrigha I interviewed agencies in Mexico, Colombia, and US. The professionalism and communication surpasses them all. Akosua and the team are truly a blessing to anyone on this journey. I am truly appreciative of her and her team. Surrogates are truly respected during this process as well as intended parents. The embryologist and gynecologist were available to answer all my questions and concerns when needed. I have recommended Afrigha to several other parents embarking on this journey and they are also impressed with Afrigha so much they have also started their journey in Ghana with Afrigha. If I could give this agency 10 out of 5 stars I would.

AMINA

REJOICE

When I came to Afrigha, I saw plenty things and everything I was told was exactly the same thing I experienced, food, clothes and beautiful rooms to sleep inside medication was giving and also when you're sick they will send you to the hospital on time and their midwife is a very nice person and also the parent coordinator is a very good person, so I truly recommend any lady who want to be a surrogate to come to Afrigha home because they are the best.

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS

Do we need to travel to Ghana to start the process?

If you opt to send frozen embryos, you and the surrogate can digitally sign the contract together with a notary.

Can we stay in touch with our surrogate during pregnancy?

This depends on the relationship between the Intended Parents and their surrogate and all of their expectations regarding contact. Some Intended Parents prefer less contact with their surrogate and some prefer to be more involved. It is important that these expectations are discussed with us prior to matching with a surrogate to ensure a successful arrangement.

Will our surrogate agree to any medical procedures that may be necessary to deliver a healthy baby?

Within our contractual agreement, the surrogate is legally obligated to undergo all requisite medical procedures essential for ensuring the birth of a healthy baby. It is imperative to highlight that this contract holds enforceable status, providing assurance and accountability for all parties involved.

How do we guarantee the surrogate relinquishes custody of the baby after birth?

Under Ghanaian law, prenatal and postnatal rights for the child firmly belong to the Intended Parents. Our priority is to provide a warm and supportive environment while adhering to these legal guidelines. The surrogate receives final payment only after the birth certificate is issued to you.

What legal steps establish parental rights after birth?

After the baby is born, intended parents typically need to take legal steps to establish their parental rights. This often involves legal procedures such as obtaining a court order or completing the necessary paperwork to establish parentage. Afrigha maintains a dedicated team of legal experts who handle all legal procedures to establish parental rights post-birth.

Who ensures the well-being of the baby during pregnancy?

An experienced live-in midwife oversees the well-being of both surrogate mothers and the precious babies they carry. Our team also includes a skilled cook and dedicated cleaner who attend to the daily needs of our residents. From preparing nourishing meals tailored to their dietary requirements to maintaining a pristine and comforting environment, everyone receives exceptional care and attention during their time with us.

How do I get breastmilk for my child after birth?

Intended parents are required to provide an electric breast pump and breast milk storage bags. The surrogate will express the breast milk and store it safely in the provided bags. Once expressed and stored, intended parents are expected to make arrangements for the collection of the breast milk from our office. This process ensures proper handling, storage, and convenience for all parties involved.

True miracles aren't instant; they are carried and revealed in time.
